Relationships and Numerology

By Ruth Drayer

"We humans are complicated beings who may not fit into the roles society has assigned to us."

Somewhere during the 1600s John Donne, an English poet, wrote "No Man is an Island" as a meditation. In time, it became a popular song recorded by several people however, with all the ways we have to communicate now, it's truer than ever. At work or at home, our entire lives are about relationships and it is important to be reminded that our primary relationship is with ourselves. No matter how far we may roam, there we are! Numerology is a profound method for understanding ourselves and our relationships because it clearly explains how unique and individual each of us is.

By knowing the full name at birth and birth date of a person, his/her entire life gets plotted out through numerology. It explains our talents, abilities, weaknesses and strengths and gives an overview of our life plan and purpose. Numerology can be especially helpful in explaining relationships because it does not tell us to change to measure up to the other person's hopes or expectations. A couple having a difficult time might go for counseling. A chart based on their names at birth tells immediately who "wears the pants" in the family, and that the wife was born with an unusual amount of masculine energy. However, since the husband was the man, she expected him to be the one to initiate new things for them to do and certainly to stand up for his beliefs. He knew she was unhappy and not respecting him, but it was not in his nature to change. His numbers told he had probably been a woman in many prior lives, or perhaps a soft spoken gentle man who had no desire to lead the pack. No amount of counseling had helped this couple but they had children and did not want to divorce. Since they were not fitting their "roles," it was simple to understand why they were having problems.

Going to a Numerologist was their last resort – and a good one because Numerology is completely neutral. It simply explains "okay, you are like this, while you are like this." So if you love each other and want to stay together, there are certain things that have to be accepted. Just like the color of one's eyes, or bone structure, we are born into this life with certain traits and characteristics which can be changed more easily with acceptance and humor than by nagging and bickering. We humans are complicated beings who may not fit into the roles society has assigned to us. Compassion is what is needed to make relationships work. Numerology is the most valuable tool for understanding ourselves. In fact each person was an island, in addition to pollution, the oceans would be filled with lonesome, sad people longing to relate with someone!
